HISTORICAL AREAS

Cultural Heritage is Fragile.

Many people today are unaware that cultural heritage is exposed to risks arising from sudden natural disasters such as earthquakes and floods, slow-moving processes such as pollution, and other human activities.

Even the most innocent gestures, such as taking small souvenirs from old pottery or mosaics, are destructive when repeated by thousands of people.

Touching a textile, stone or metal object leaves traces of oil or acid from sweat.

Climbing a historical building causes its erosion and disintegration.

Writing or engraving a name causes irreparable damages.

Walking around with large bags or backpacks in narrow and crowded environments can overturn a piece or scratch a picture on the wall, causing it to be destroyed.

There are countless ways in which we unwittingly contribute to the destruction of cultural heritage.

Let's come together to protect our cultural heritage and benefit from its diversity and richness.
